

SEANKELLY

Brady, Anna and Daniel Cassady. "Here's how you can help the Ukraine aid effort by buying art." The Art Newspaper, March 10, 2022.

THE ART NEWSPAPER

Auction houses, galleries, online platforms and artists are selling works for charities helping those affected by the Russian invasion of Ukraine. Here is a selection

Most of us feel utterly powerless in the face of Russia's invasion of Ukraine. But, while buying a painting or a print may not be at the forefront of your mind right now, some artists, auction houses, galleries and online platforms are selling art, via various methods, to help the aid effort in Ukraine. Here are a few avenues through which you can help—new initiatives are cropping up daily, but this should get you started.

Idris Khan with his print I Thought We Had More Time...

What: Idris Khan print

Where: online

When: until 31 March

The British artist Idris Khan is selling a new print titled I Thought We Had More Time... to raise money for the Disasters Emergency Committee, an umbrella organisation that includes charities such as the British Red Cross, Oxfam and Save the Children. The print is an open edition that is only available for 10 days (until 31 March) on the Migrate Art website. It costs £300, with all profits going to charity. According to a spokesperson for the artist, the work raised more than £100,000 in its first 48 hours of being on sale.