Structures define the everyday human experience. From the built environment of the city to ideas of community, society relies on order to make sense of the world. This week's selection unearths the varied manifestations of the term, challenging and broadening perspectives.

Featuring contributions from Alec Soth, Candida Höfer and James Casebere, Sean Kelly Gallery brings together artists who take inspiration from architecture. The exhibition showcases a diverse range of media – including photography, painting and sculpture – in order to investigate the abstract and tangible ways constructions embody ideals and aspirations. From 6 January. www.skny.com.
