"Asymmetrical Symmetry" — Landon Metz at Sean Kelly Gallery

Through October 20

Landon Metz's "Asymmetrical Symmetry," on at the Sean Kelly Gallery in New York until, is the rare exhibition that's been not only crafted for the gallery's space but one that has also made its response to the gallery — its walls, architecture, and environment — part of the artwork itself, writes our reporter, Cody Delistraty. Creating "narratives" out of the gallery's space, the 33-year-old, New York-based artist, who's beloved by vogueish minimalist publications like Cereal, has created a series of minimalist, abstract works that wrap around walls and pillars, and, in doing so, create a new kind of bisected "psychological" space, as he told Delistraty in an interview.
